

Paio Soares de Taveirós

Rubrica

I don't know anyone whose plight can match the plight that's my disgrace: I'm dying for your sake, alas!
and you, dear lady, red and white, want me to paint you well composed, when I saw you in simple clothes.
I wish I'd stayed in bed that day or found you less attractive!

Yes, dear lady, from that day since, my life, alas! has been unhappy.
And you, daughter of Paio Moniz, act as if you were convinced that you bestowed on me a robe when from you I've had no clothes and never had, beloved lady, so much as a leather strap.
