

João Garcia de Guilhade

Rubrica

You saw, my gentle ladies, when my sweetheart came to talk with me, how he insisted endlessly until I offered him my belt.
Now he's demanding something else.

You also saw (I wish you hadn't!) how, ladies, he kept insisting until I removed my shirt's string and handed it over. Now he's demanding something absolutely damning.

Sir João de Guilhade will always obtain presents from me, if that's his pleasure, for he gives me good things as well, and my loyalty will never wane, but now he's demanding something insane.
